

Journal News – 2018

JALL has had another very productive year. In early February, the 302 page, 20 article 2017 Conference Special Issue was published. Many thanks to Fiona Henderson (Victoria University) and Corinna Ridley (Deakin University) for their mammoth editorial effort in bringing this special issue to fruition. Across the year to date, we have also seen nine articles and a book review published in the general issue. Interestingly, this general issue has had quite an international flavour, with two articles from New Zealand based educators, and one each from educators based in Singapore, Israel and the US.

Once again, a big thank you to all the reviewers and the regular editorial team, Kate Chanock, Claire Aitchison, Cally Guerin, Rosemary Clerehan, Tim Moore and Andrew Johnson, who have all volunteered considerable amounts of their time and expertise to ensure JALL continues to publish high quality work of value to the academic language and learning community.
